it to be good fun to get Dave stirred up. He began ridiculing the water carrier and, when he saw Dave shaking with nervousness, still persisted. Suddenly Dave lost control of himself and struck at his termenter. Conlon, whi is the bigger man, knocked him down. Utterly beside himself, Dave seized a sharp double-bitted axe and rushed at Conlon Conlon turned and fled, with the infuri ated water carrier close behind him, the axe raised to strike, Half a dozen bosses and men started pellmell after, but Con-lon and his pursuer had the start and kept the rase to themselves. For some kept the rase to themselves. For some distance just about a yard of space separated Coulon from a cloven skull. Then Dave's overwrought state began to tell on him and he lost strength, taling behind. Coulon kept going like a locomotive. O. M. Gallup, superintendent of construction, finally got Dave's axe away from him and the danger of a lover Dave declared that he had no recolumn. ver Dave declared that he had no recol section of the assault or his pursuit of Conlon.
